FRUITS OF THE TRAIL.

Polk Miller, Charlie Pearce and Kay. Adamson's Coon Hunt.

THE KIND OF COONS THEY GOT.

[THIS ISN'T A COON.]

To a complete understanding, no less than a due regard for truth, it is necessary to label our illustration; and yet it is just as near a coon as were any of the trophies captured by a party of prominent sportsmen on a recent hunt.

Polk Miller the Virginia humorist had been for a few days the guest of Colonel William H. Robb in the county, and it was planned that a couple of kindred spirits be called in and a campaign opened against the festive coon.

If the state had been searched by the Bertillon system, two more congenial persons than Colonel Charles D. Pearce and Dr. H. K. Adamson could not have been found.

Friday afternoon they hid themselves to the Robb manner, and after the formality of a splendid supper they set out on a night's trail—armed with dog and gun and axe and a full cargo of hope.

Slashing through sluices, climbing fences, stumbling over stumps and falling over logs, they pursued the hunt with undiminished ardor, finally capturing a pair of possum, sleek enough to make a darkey's eye dim a searchlight.

But the coon was their goal, and on they trudged till their tickers were dangerously near the daylight hour, when their faithful dogs "treed" another find.

You can't fool the average "coon dog," and it goes without saying that long before the hunters reached the "stand" you couldn't have fooled either of them—their last prize was a polecat!

A peace commission was hastily organized, the Doctor prescribed a large and immediate dose of "disinfectant" from a bottle, and the coonless hunters wended their homeward way, fully convinced that it was much more pleasant to read of these exploits than it was to participate in them.

How many of the nicest things in life grow on the other side of a barbed wire fence. Nine times out of ten the fence is "I can't afford it." Well, if ever that fence was between you and a nice new dress it's not there today—not even a stake hole to show where it stood. We have good and stylish dress stuffs for 25c a yard; cheaper materials, too, if you want them. A large collection of handsome weaves and colors wait your selection at 50c, while for 75c are qualities and styles even Miss Hardtopple will surely like.
